

BEDIENT'S WORK BEST OF WORLD SERIES THUS FAR

Remarkable Performance Proves Joe Wood Has Reliable Partner: Giants Make Mistake in Underestimating Youngster.

By R. W. LARDNER.

By International News Service. ship won his heat today and practically put McGraw's entries out of the running. Said dark horse was young Hugh Bedient, yearling pitcher on Stabl's staff and fourth choice, after Wood, Collins and O'Brien, in the Boston betting. Minus world's series experience and experience in crucial conflicts of any kind, he beat the wonderful Mathewson 2 to 1 and gave the Red Sox their third victory of the set. Even McGraw will not claim that his team now has better than a slim fighting chance for the winners' end.

In their newspaper stories this morning several of the Giants remarked that Joe Wood was Boston's only pitcher; that New York had hit all the others tried out and that Joe never could cop baseball's highest honors alone.

Did Not Expect Bedient.

Did Not Expect Bedient.

They will realize now that Joe wasn't expected to. Bedient had pitched the eleventh inning of the tie game on Wednesday. He had pitched the ninth of the one lost to Marquard day before vesterday. He had not been scored on in either round but he had appeared wild and the Glants were not figuring that Stahl would start him. This was shown by the fact that in New York's batting practice "Hooks" Willize did the hurling to the Gotham sluggers. They were looking for a left-hander, Hay Collins.

"Decobably no one was more surprised" to the Gotham sluggers. They were looking for a left-hander, Hay Collins.

"Decobably no one was more surprised" the names of Bedient and Cady. It was too late then to rehearse batting against a right-handed man, and the Glants gritted their teeth and swore they would get revenge on Jake for crossing them.

Told to Wait.

Their orders were to wait out everything on Bedient, to make him pitch the full string. And in the first few linning the regular seasen or they would have been danger of killing seven or late wasn't deal Matty was the only gent available and Matty was the only gent was the only gent available and Matty was the only gent was hit terribly in spots and the flatter the third lining.

McGraw's Pitchers Wrong.

McGraw's Pitchers Wrong.

McGraw was decidedly up against it for pitchers. He didn't dare work Leon Ames, for Leon has control once a month and his manager didn't know whether or not he was due. Te-reau had pitched on the previous day and besides he was complaining of a split finger. Maryuard turned up with a sore arm and that put him among the ineligibles. Otis Crandall is a finisher rather than a starter, so there was no chance for him and there would have been danger of killing seven or eight infielders if he had named George Wiltse. Matty was the only gent available and Matty went to his death like a brave soldier. He was hit terribly in spots and yet the score will show that he allowed only five safe ones and none at all after the third linning.

been wise to the fact that it's comparatively easy to reach first base with Bedlent working and nearly impossible to get the rest of the way, when the youth is right.

Thus, Devore and Murray refused to strike at anything in the first two rounds and they were rewarded with passes. But only one of them attempted second base. Devore walked again in the third, but Hugh only tightened upand began placing the pill where the Giants had to swing at it.

Loses Wildness; Giants Helpless.

After that Bedient lost his wildness and the Glants were practically helpless, except in the inning in which they secured their only run. That was the seventh, and if Larry Gardner had experienced a little luck in his fielding of McCormick's drive. New York would have been shut out cleanly.

In other words, Bedient's game was the best pitched of the series to date. Four hits were made off him and two came in the seventh. In the other sessions he was a bear. To be sure, he had the best kind of backing from his pals, but he didn't stand in any real need of it.

Mericle's long wallop in the nintb might have started something with some one else than Speaker playing center-field for Boston, but you know Speaker belongs here and New York must figure on his sbillty to cover the ground behind him.

Red Sox Catcher Says Bedient Is a Wonder

Bedient's Jump Ball.

Bedient's Jump Ball.

Bedient has a fast ball with a jump on it—a jump upward—that forces his opponents to pop up easy fly balls. If you tabulate the game he won from the Glants, you will find that of the twenty-seven men put out by our side, no fewer than twenty-three of them went out on easy fles and pop flies and fouls. What is equally remarkable is the fact that the Glants only hit four balls on the ground in the entire game. Just think of that! And the Glants made three hits, maybe four, according to how McCormick's drive to Gardner is scored.

When you see a team knocking up pop flies all the time, you may know that the pitcher has something on the ball. The exhibition of Bedient against the Glants was one of the best feats of its kind I have ever seen.

There was no sensational fielding that tout off base hits. Every fly was easy, except, perhaps, one that Speaker had to run for. Most of them were high pope that the outfielders, especially Hooper, had only to take a few steps to be under.

One reason why Bedient was so effective against McGraw's men was his very deceptive delivery. He winds up very slowly, but when his arm straightens tike a fiash. The ball is on top of the batter before he realizes it.

The Giants were simply helpless in his hands. Bedient had the utmost confi-dence in himself. He was easily the cool-est member on our team in today's game, and that is saying a lot, for our men are cool-headed and I have never seen them ratifed.

is seeing his first year's service on a major league club. Deubtless the New York manager figured the game as good as won when the youngster gave the first man that facel thim a base on balls. But he doesn't know Bedient as well as his team-mates do. Nor did he know how much Bedient Redient is unquestionably the best pitcher that came from the minor leagues last spring. I will go further and say he is the best young pitcher in the two big leagues.
